Brief description of the contents

This eminently theoretical subject deals with the basics related to the topic of the transference of knowledge, one of the capital phenomena for the study of the history of Mediterranean cultures and religions. Hence, the first section of the seminar focuses on terminology by defining the differences between transference and transmission of knowledge, as well as the diverse interpretative models of both aforementioned processes. The second part approaches the three main processes of knowledge's exchange, to wit, transmission, translation, and transformation. The transference, considered as a specific model of transmission, is dealt in the third part of the seminar by, on the one hand, defining the transference as a dynamic appropriation, and, on the other, considering the concepts of continuity vs. discontinuity, synchrony vs. diachronic, and, finally, the post-structuralist models.
